Julie Dick's love for tennis began at age 14, right after she and her family moved to Kentucky. Julie's passion for tennis led to her first job as a tennis instructor with Parks and Recreation in her small hometown in Kentucky. While Agassi, Sampras, Graf and Seles were ruling the tennis scene on the world stage, Julie coordinated numerous local tennis events that were very popular among both youth and adults.

Julie's commitment to teaching youth tennis and program coordination continued into her adult years. With her two young children in tow, she decided to meet the demand of an inspired community. Julie formed the Georgetown Tennis Association (GTA), a USTA affiliated Community Tennis Association. In 2010, Julie was awarded the prestigious Janet Louer National Organizer of the Year which recognizes an individual who delivers USTA Junior Team Tennis to their community and embodies the true meaning of having a positive impact on children.

Julie says, "I have been so fortunate that I have been able to use my love for tennis to give back to the communities in which I live."

In 2016, Julie and her family moved to the Triangle area. Julie serves as the executive director of the Raleigh Tennis Association, a position she's occupied since 2016. In 2020, USTA North Carolina Julie Dick was the recipient of the 2020 Educational Merit Award given by Buster & Karen Brown; and RTA was named the Community Tennis Association of the Year.
